

CAN YOU INFER?

Read the situations and answer the questions.

The room was filled with colorful balloons and streamers. A large cake sat on a table, adorned with a candle in the shape of a number. Friends and family gathered around, laughter filling the air as they waited for the guest of honor to arrive.

What do you think is the occasion?

- A. A birthday party
- B. An important meeting
- C. A sports match

Emily clutched her backpack tightly as she stepped onto the school bus, her heart racing with nervous excitement. Today was the day of the big spelling bee, and she had spent weeks practicing in preparation. As the bus rumbled down the street, Emily closed her eyes and whispered her spelling list under her breath, her fingers tracing imaginary letters in the air. She was determined to do her best and make her family proud.

What can you infer about Emily's feelings toward the spelling bee?

- A. She knows she won't win.
- B. She is nervous about the competition.
- C. She doesn't care about the spelling bee.

Jake pedaled his bike as fast as he could, the wind whipping through his hair as he raced down the sidewalk. He loved the feeling of freedom that came with riding his bike, the world whizzing past in a blur of colors and shapes. As he rounded the corner, he spotted his friend Jack up ahead, waving excitedly from the park. With a whoop of delight, Jake pumped his legs even harder.

Where do you think Jake is pedalling?

- A. He is pedalling in the neighborhood
- B. He is pedalling inside his school premises.
- C. He is pedalling in a busy marketplace.

