

READ AND INFER

Read the passages given below and answer the questions.

In a bustling city market, a new stall opened, selling exotic fruits from distant lands. The stall owner, Mr. Lee, proudly displayed the vibrant fruits, many of which the city's residents had never seen before. People gathered around, taking photos and chattering excitedly. As customers tasted free samples, their expressions ranged from sheer delight to puzzled curiosity.

- 1 Which key details help you infer that Mr. Lee's fruits were unique and uncommon to the city's residents?

- 2 How might people have felt before trying the fruits? How did their feelings change upon tasting them?

Jason and his teammates were working on a new prototype for a tech competition. After weeks of debugging, they powered on their device. Their faces lit up with joy when they heard the familiar startup chime, signaling it was operational.

Select the inference that you can draw from the following key detail: their faces lit up with joy.

a. The prototype device functioned as expected.

b. Jason forgot to bring the necessary tools for the prototype.

